Mike Richter's cd-roms:

The Audio Encyclopedia is a presentation of text and sound. These volumes can have up to 40 hours of of monaural FM radio quality titles. Also on these discs you have explanations and descriptions of aspects such as the composer, cast, dates, and even the opera itself presented through HTML, that uses the included browser.

Mike's hope is to use the broad coverage of each volume to inspire publication of at least selected materials in higher quality from better sources using modern processing.

Ideally, the Encyclopedia will become a reference work, summarizing in sound a portion of our history otherwise preserved in text and pictures. As with any reference, the Encyclopedia is intended to support research and education while pointing to the best materials for further investigation.

Martha Argerich

Born in Buenos Aires, Martha Argerich was enrolled for piano study at the age of five by her mother with piano teacher Vincenzo Scaramuzza. He stressed lyricism and feeling: "When the sound is empty," he said to her, "it sounds like a pair of pants walking into the room with nothing inside them." She made her debut playing a Mozart concerto when she was eight, mentally preparing herself for the concert by making herself believe that, "if I missed a single note, I would explode." She did not miss a single note. In 1955 her family moved to Europe, where she studied in Switzerland with Madeleine Lipatti, then with Nikita Magaloff and eventually with Friedrich Gulda, an early idol.

In 1957, at the age of 16, she won the Geneva International Competition and the Ferruccio Busoni International Competition within three weeks. At the Bolzano Competition she met Arturo Benedetti Michelangeli. When she was about 20 and in the throes of an artistic crisis, she... Read More
